Forget masked balls, these photos are about masked muffs

Masker mind!

These scorching shots are from a series of images called Naked Girls With Masks, by London photographer Ben Hopper. He got the idea after snapping pics of stunner Cat Chapell and her girlfriend last July. "We were at a friend's house, and there were costumes and masks lying around," explains Ben. "Cat's got an amazing tattoo by Xed Le Head, who's famous for inking hypnotic geometrical patterns, so I persuaded her to show it off by stripping and sticking a mask on her head. I loved the effect; her perfect figure reminded me of the nude supermodels in Helmut Newton's black-and-white photos. I found other models via social networking sites, although Hana Mokrisova - who I snapped wearing a grotesque rabbit head and a Venetian mask - bumped into me at Torture Garden. She was wandering around topless with a mask on, so she was made for the job."

Ben sourced the masks from different places: "I borrowed an octopus-shaped monstrosity from performer Tom Baker, which was still soaked with his sweat; artist Skot Reynolds (AKA Grave Industries) transformed an Ikea lampshade into a spooky skull headpiece, and Canadian mask-maker Douglas Witt gave me three custom-made creations," he explains. "I wanted the girls' bodies to be separate from their brains, so I made sure the masks covered their faces."

Ben's also been working on a fashion shoot with Cirque du Soleil-style acrobats 7 Fingers, and another project involving beautiful women with armpit hair. We're sure that the resulting photographs will blow us away when they're unmasked.
